

17 Years of Persecution

Falun Gong (also called Falun Dafa) is an ancient mind and body practice that consists of moral teachings and meditation exercises. Practitioners strive to live by the principles of Truthfulness, Compassion and Tolerance. Visit: www.falunfa.org

Because of its tremendous health benefits, Falun Gong became hugely popular in China in just seven short years since its introduction to the public with 100 million people practicing by 1999, outnumbering Communist Party members. Fearing Falun Gong's growing popularity, on July 20, 1999, former Communist Party leader Jiang Zemin ordered the persecution to "eradicate" Falun Gong.

China's Transplant Industry Built on Mass Murder of Falun Gong

Innocent people around the world have unknowingly become complicit in this crime. Patients who were promised fresh organs in weeks fly to China for transplants. Western hospitals and universities train Chinese surgeons who go back to China to harvest organs from prisoners of conscience. Pharmaceutical companies perform clinical trials and profit from anti-rejection drugs in China.

"Mass murder is alive and well," from the foreword of The Slaughter, by China analyst Ethan Gutmann.

In 2006, former Canadian Secretary of State David Kilgour and human rights lawyer, David Matas concluded: "We believe that there has been and continues today to be large scale organ seizures from unwilling Falun Gong practitioners." Bloody Harvest was published in 2009.

An Update to 'Bloody Harvest' & 'The Slaughter'

June 2016: Based on a meticulous examination of transplant programs from hundreds of hospitals in China, drawing on media reports, official propaganda, medical journals, hospital websites and deleted websites found in archive, researchers estimate that as many as 1.5 million organ transplants have taken place in China since the year 2000 and the primary source of these organs is Falun Gong practitioners who were killed in the process.
